During the hearing, the first in a series focusing on the activities of Wilson and Terpil, the CIA officials denied that the agency had sanctioned any contacts with the two or any involvement in the recruitment of former U.S. Army Special Forces troops to train terrorists in Libya.

Boland said he told the CIA officials the committee has "a very deep concern" about possible ramifications of the work Wilson and Terpil have done for Qaddafi.

Wilson, last reported living in Libya, and Terpil, said to be in Lebanon, were indicted in 1980 on charges of illegally shipping explosives and arms to Libya after they left the agency in 1976.

Two lower-level employees were fired for cooperating with them while still with the CIA.

Boland quoted Casey as saying in his opening statement that the CIA's ongoing investigation came to the "tentative conclusion" there was no official agency involvement in any of the the Libyan activities, no official contact with Wilson and Terpil after their indictment and no involvement in the recruitment of Green Berets to train terrorists for Qaddafi.

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Date of transcription January 14, 1982

George Bradley, 1550 Southeast Minorca Avenue, Port St. Lucie, Florida, after being apprised of the identity of the interviewing Agent, was advised that this interview concerned Bradley's recent activities in Libya.

Bradley explained that he was in Libya from March 3, 1981, until December 23, 1981, returning to his home in Port St. Lucie on Christmas Eve. He was employed by Western Recruitment as a maintenance instructor for CH-47 helicopters. He worked at a formal school outside of Tripoli, Libya, on a dirt road adjacent to the airport there.

By way of background, Bradley explained that he had been working for Boeing Aircraft Company in the position of Quality Control at the Grumman Aviation Corporation in Stuart, Florida. Five Boeing employees were assigned to the Grumman location to work on plans and particular production phases for the 767 aircraft. Bradley had previously been employed with Boeing in the Vertol Division, which is the helicopter division located in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Bradley is now retired from his position with Boeing where he had previously spent 26 years.

Previously, Bradley had spent approximately 14 months in Iran, beginning in December, 1977. While in that country, Bradley worked with the E.A.G. Agusta International, an Italian company operating out of Brussels, Belgium, which was acting as licensee for Boeing-Vertol.

In relation to the position in Libya, Bradley originally received a telephone call from an associate, [redacted] who had worked with Bradley [redacted] inquired about Bradley's interest in becoming an instructor in Libya where several other former associates [redacted] were also employed. Another former associate [redacted] then contacted Bradley in Florida about his availability to begin employment. Bradley eventually signed a one-year contract for employment with Western Recruitment, extending from March, 1981 to March, 1982. It was only after Bradley's arrival in Libya that he realized Western Recruitment was a corporation operated by Edwin Wilson. When his Bradley explained that Agusta International supplied the spare parts which were used on the CH-47 helicopters in operation in Libya and Augsta also sold these helicopters to the Libyan government, possibly through the World Health Organization. The only instances that Bradley was aware of whereby Americans would fly the helicopters outside of Tripoli involved flights to Sebha, Libya, where a repaired CH-47 was taken and the return trip was made with another similar plane, which needed maintenance.

At any one time, Bradley estimated that Western Recruitment had approximately 11 - 14 Americans employed in Libya. He understood that there were approximately 38 - 40 Americans recruited through this company of Wilson's, but there was a very high ratio of turnover because of the difficulty most of them had in working with [redacted]

At the facility where Bradley was working, there were approximately 10 - 15 Libyans studying under the instructors such as Bradley. His personal opinion was that the Libyans there displayed no real interest in actually learning their job and had a very brief attention span. It was difficult to keep them working, as they would frequently prefer to go outside and sit in the shade. Only one of the Libyans spoke extremely good English, with several of the others having a passable speaking knowledge of English. These individuals would then act as interpreters for the other Libyans who spoke no English whatsoever.

Western Recruitment's contract with the Libyan government extended from October to October. As a result, at the beginning of October, 1981, when the current contract had terminated, Bradley was advised that while there might be a time lag of two to three months, the contract would indeed be renegotiated. As a result, the Americans working for Western Recruitment remained on the job, but Bradley, on October 10, 1981, returned to the U.S. for his 14 days of rest and relaxation. At the end of that period, he returned to Libya but found that no one was working at the facility outside of Tripoli. The talk still circulated that the contract would be renewed and Bradley was encouraged to remain in Tripoli until these arrangements could be effected. He inquired about why no one had advised him telephonically while he was in the U.S. about this situation, but was given no explanation. Apparently, the American workers ceased operations at this teaching facility as of October 13, 1981. Ultimately it was determined that Western Recruitment would not begin a renewal of its contract with the Libyan government and Bradley made plans to return to the U.S.

The usual red tape involved in government circles there, however, delayed this return for approximately three or four weeks until he was finally able to leave the country on December 23, 1981.

Bradley added that while he was in Libya for about 9½ months, their only real source of news involving diplomatic relations between Libya and the United States was in the form of Time and Newsweek magazines which were "smuggled" into the country. Bradley claimed that he knew of nothing involving any Americans transporting CH-47 helicopters or C-130 transport planes used in the Libyan invasion of Chad. He was also unaware of any American involvement in military missions of the Libyan government in other areas of Northern Africa. He felt that much of the information being provided to the news media outside of Libya was highly exaggerated and inaccurate. It was his understanding that one of the British sources of much of the information which became newsworthy about Americans involved in Libya was totally inaccurate.

Bradley offered his cooperation and assistance to the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) regarding his activities in Libya and those of other Americans with whom he was associated.
